The following rubrics can help you decide what to include. Please READ THEM CAREFULLY! Your instructor will review your contributions on an ongoing basis, and they will affect how your instructor gives feedback on this assignment. The more work you put into the rubric, the better an experience your instructor will have reviewing it. As such, please take the time to read them carefully and make sure that your contributions match the rubrics. Your contributions will be graded for three categories: technical accuracy, analysis of motivations, and strategic argumentation. Depending on the level of engagement you show in a particular category, a grade may be changed from a C+ to an A-. Technical Accuracy: All of your work must be accurate. If any sentence taken from a source is incorrect or incomplete, it must be fixed so that it is complete. This is a failing grade, and you will have to re-submit with the correct information. Analysis of Motivation: You must explain what you believe the motivation for your selected topic is. In doing so, you must explain how it relates to the value of what you are learning from this assignment. In some cases, an essay can address multiple topics in one research paper. In this case, each topic should be given a brief statement detailing its relevance in regards to the final grade in this category. Strategic Argumentation: Your arguments must be sound and applicable to the assignment in question.
